APPENDIX H

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT ON "HUSKY" AIRBORNE OPERATIONS

A Board of Officers appointed by General Eisenhower, Commander-in-Chief, Allied Forces, reviewed the airborne operations during Operation "Husky" which form the subject of comment in the reports of the Commander-in-Chief, Mediterranean, the Task Force Commanders and other Senior Officers.

In the Board's report of proceedings dated 23rd July, 1943, the following description is given of the "Husky" airborne operations:—

- (a) "In the first U.S. airborne operation one parachute combat team was dropped on the road approaches to the Gela area on night, 9/10th July, with the mission of blocking enemy attempts to reinforce the Gela sector. Because of errors in navigation, a contributory cause of which was a high wind (35 m.p.h.), the dropping zones were missed by all but one battalion. This battalion, however, captured its objective, and held it against counter-attack. Moral effect was considerable, and losses were slight. 220 aircraft were employed, of which eight were lost. None was lost as result of friendly A.A. fire."
- (b) "In the second U.S. operation approximately 2,500 additional troops of the 82nd Airborne Division were flown into the Gela area on the night of 10/11th July. The mission was merely one of reinforcement, the intention being to drop parachute troops within our own lines. This force, consisting of 170 aircraft, was subjected to A.A. fire from enemy ground forces and friendly naval and ground forces, with losses of 23 aircraft and 410 personnel. Fifty per cent. of returned aircraft were damaged. This flight arrived in the battle area just following an enemy bombing attack. The operation achieved its intention."
- (c) "The first British use of airborne troops was a glider operation on the night of 9/10th July. This involved a brigade group (equivalent of one U.S. combat team) which was to be landed west of Syracuse with the mission of seizing the river crossing in that vicinity and capture the western outskirts of the city. 134 gliders were used. As result of errors in navigation due in part to a high wind (35 m.p.h.) only approximately 12 gliders were landed on or near the objective, and approximately 12 gliders were released too soon and went into the sea. Others were so badly scattered that they were able to operate only in small groups."
- (d) "The second British operation on the night of 13/14th July, had as its mission the capture of the bridge across the Carualunga River seven miles south of Catania. 124 aircraft transporting a parachute brigade (equivalent of one U.S. regiment) were employed. 17 of the aircraft towed gliders. 56 aircraft dropped their troops on or near the dropping zones, 24 made drops which were widely scattered, 27 returned to their base without dropping their troops. 10 aircraft were lost, principally due to friendly A.A. fire. The route of the airborne troops was over a friendly naval convoy which was under attack by enemy aircraft at the time. Forty per cent. of returning aircraft were damaged by A.A. fire. Mission was accomplished."
